Theories of Gender differences and identity. Biological factors play an important part in determining and categorizing us as male or female. Our sex depends on whether we are born with distinct male or female genitals and a genetic program that released male or female hormones to stimulate the development of the reproductive system.

Theories of Gender differences and identity

Psychodynamic theories, following on from Sigmund Freud's psychoanalytic theory, focus on unconscious drives, the relationship of the child and early experiences with the parents (or primary caregivers). Gender is a core part of personality that rests on the child's awareness of its anatomy and its identification with the same-sex parent.
